

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

A device for introducing substances into water has a substantially tubular element connectable to a water passage and also connectable to a container which stores a substance so that the supplied water can be reached with the substance and supplied to a consumer, and a connecting element for connecting the tubular element to the water passage in a predetermined position of the device desired by a user.